

ABSTRACT

A lightweight ballistic resistant materials and method of making the same are provided. The material includes at least two layers of penetration resistant material intermittently connected to form areas of connection between the material and much larger areas of material where there is no connection between the adjacent layers. The intermittently connected material may be used as a component of composite ballistic panels or may be utilized alone to provide penetration protection.

977473.2